Be wisely worldly, be not worldly wise.

The judges of the Supreme Court had better be thankful that they escaped with their lives.

In much of the bribery investigation going on in different States there seems to be more of a desire to make party capital than purify politics.

If young men knew as much as old men and old men only had the strength to do possessed by young men not very many things would be left undone.

Really Charleston is the logical city in which to hold the Panama Canal than any other city, and should be benefited by it more than any other.

Governor Blease had better not jump on Senator Tillman too savagely. He may need the assistance of the Senator's friends when he comes before the people for endorsement next year.

There has appeared in northeastern China another outbreak of that dire malady which, under the common name of the plague, has recurred through the past nineteen centuries, at intervals more or less frequent, to scourge mankind.

Many people have a selfish idea of religion. They are intent upon their own safety only and regard religion as a sort of insurance ticket for the future. True religion consists in right living and in showing mercy, kindness and helpfulness to others.

In some of the States where very necessary railroad legislation has been enacted quite a number of railroads now declare that they are out of politics and that they are glad of it. That is a sentiment the public heartily reciprocates in those same States, while at the same time continuing in a watchful mood.

Governor Blease's arraignment of Senator Tillman for violating the law by serving as a United States Senator and a trustee of Clemson and Winthrop at the same time gives great satisfaction to those folks who have always fought Senator Tillman. It is the only act of Governor Blease that these enemies of Tillman have endorsed so far.

This is a wealthy nation, but one gets some idea of how unevenly that wealth is distributed in the fact that one person out of nine in New York city gets charitable relief every year. Of course the conditions there are somewhat peculiar, but none the less the truth remains that the great mass of wealth is concentrated in the hands of a few people.

It is the irony of fate for New Orleans to have her ambition to have the Panama Canal Exposition bid there squelched by the Republicans in the House. It served her just right for deserting her own people and going over to the Republicans and helping them pass the iniquitous tariff law to rob the people.

Some people are always going to do some act of mercy, some charitable deed, extend a helping hand, and say loving words—by and by. They are like the girl who, walking along a path bordered by beautiful flowers, said she would pick some on her return, but who never returned along the same path. Better, by far, do the kind things and say the cheering word now for we may not return by the same way.

American residents in Japan have organized a Peace Society. A big meeting was held recently at Yokohama, in which leading business men participated and much enthusiasm was displayed. If there is no danger of war between the United States and Japan, why should a Peace Society be formed in Japan by the Americans who are over there exploiting that country?

With the country defrauded of so many millions by the sugar trust, and so many millions by tobacco and other trusts, one cannot but speculate as to the total amount the country has been victimized each year. And yet with all this plundering and robbery scarcely a principal offender has been brought to book. Immunity, legal subterfuges and other evasions have seemed to interfere with the course of justice.

The plague which is now killing thousands of Chinamen daily dates back to a few centuries before Christ. In one form or another it has visited Asia and Europe time and again with disastrous results. In the middle of the fourteenth century it appeared as the Black Death, an infection which left its monstrous tracks in literature and art and even in institutions of government and doctrines of religion. On that occasion it killed millions of people.

Bleese Was Wrong.

There is no doubt about Governor Bleese being in the wrong when he refused to appoint the man recommended by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and substituted another man of his own choice to act as judge in holding the Richard Court.

The law provides that when a Circuit Court to be held and vacancy for any cause, in judgeship exists, "The chief justice or presiding associate justice may assign any other circuit judge disengaged to hold the courts of such circuit. In the event that there be no other circuit judge disengaged, then the governor, upon the recommendation of the Supreme Court, or the chief justice thereof, shall immediately commission as special judge such person learned in the law as shall be recommended to hold courts of such circuit or to hold such special court for that term only."

It will be seen that the law is very plain on the subject, and Governor Bleese has no right to disobey it. Not even to reward his friends, which point he stresses in refusing to appoint the man recommended by the Chief Justice Jones. In taking the action he did, Governor Bleese might cause a great deal of trouble by having cases tried before a judge who is not legally appointed. The legality of our courts is a matter that vitally concerns every citizen of the State.

Governor Bleese has arraigned Senator Tillman and others as violators of the law for holding two official positions and has called on the General Assembly to enforce the law, which he claims has been violated by Senator Tillman and others. Governor Bleese may be right in getting after Senator Tillman and others for violating the law by holding two official positions, but this does not excuse him for violating the law in a more serious way than he charges on Senator Tillman and others. He has no more right to violate the laws than any one else.

Naming the Farm.

Give the farm a name and keep the farm up to the name. A name gives distinction, it is an expression of honest pride, it shows an interest in the place. It means something more than so many acres of brown earth, a dwelling and barns. It means a place that one feels is in best sense the home of himself and his family. Sentiment gathers around it and crystallizes so that at last the owner does not so much ask in declining years, "How much can I get for my farm?" but, "Who is going to succeed me on it?" And that means much, for it means a deepening and strengthening of home ties and those of locality, all of which is greatly needed in our American rural life.

But for practical reasons as well as sentimental it is wise to bestow a name upon the farm. No self-respecting man would give a good name to his farm and then not keep the farm in good condition. The sense of pride and of the fitness of things would impel the farmer and his family to do their best. That would mean better civilization, house and barns painted, fences in good repair, better stock and better crops, and a more attractive appearance within and without the dwelling.

There is scarcely a farm, however situated, but some appropriate name may be given it. The landscape, a spring, clump of trees, position, historic associations are among the many things that may suggest the name. And always remember that it is with the farmer more than with any one else; rests the solution of the problem of arresting the drift citywards. An attractive home, a home that has a distinctiveness about it goes a long way towards the solution.

Fighting the White Plague.

Nearly $15,000,000 was spent in the campaign against consumption in this country last year, according to the figures of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. As the New York World says the amount is nearly double that devoted to this beneficent use in 1909 and almost attains the proportions of a war budget; it would indeed have built two Dreadnoughts of the Connecticut or Kansas type. Little more than a quarter of a century has elapsed since Koch's discovery of the tubercle bacillus made possible a systematic attack on the disease, and it is mainly within the last ten years that the fight has been carried on under international co-operation. As an exhibit of society's progress in the "moral equivalent of war," the campaign against the white plague must rank among the great achievements of the wonderful first decade of the twentieth century. Finally the white plague, which is the most destructive enemy of the human race, will be conquered and will entirely disappear from the earth. Rapid strides are being made toward this most desirable consummation now by the successful fight that is being made by all the nations of the earth. It will take a little time, but this dreaded enemy of the human family is doomed.

Poor Old Depew.

Poor old Chauncey Depew, who represents the trusts and big corporations in the United States senate as a senator from New York, has grown real pessimistic since the people turned him down in the last election by electing a Democratic legislature, and sees great and lasting trouble to the country if the proposition to elect senators by popular vote is carried into effect. This is what he predicted in the senate the other day, when it had that proposition under consideration.

"This resolution, as reported from the judiciary committee," said Depew, "seems to permit the States to disfranchise large classes of their electors. It virtually repeals the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the constitution. The next cry will be 'why not elect the supreme court of the United States by popular vote? Why not elect the federal judiciary everywhere by a popular vote?'"

But a few short years ago, when the trusts were more completely in the saddle, when the corporations held sway in the legislatures of the States, when the big insurance companies spent the policyholders' money to elect candidates of the interests, when no one dared to raise a voice against the greed of the tariff barons, Chauncey Mitchell Depew went up and down the country as the special agent of optimism. Everything was all right then.

But now, says The Commoner, when the "back-to-the-people" movement is showing signs of real life, when the common people are within sight of popular government, everything turns into a dark, damp gloom, and the distinguished senator begins to fear that the American people, after all, are really not ready for self-government. Poor old Depew deserves sympathy. He has represented the trusts and big corporations so long that he can see no good in any thing else.

The State of South Carolina—County of Orangeburg.

The Edisto Savings Bank of Orangeburg, South Carolina, a banking corporation of said State, Plaintiff, against Leonidas L. Jackson, Defendant.

By virtue of the judgment in the above entitled case, I will sell at public auction at Orangeburg court house, during the legal hours for sale, on the first Monday in March, 1911, being the 6th day of said month, the following described real estate:

All that certain tract of land, known as the Bailey Place, consisting originally of two tracts contiguous to each other, one of eight hundred acres, more or less, formerly of the late John S. Jennings, of said county, deceased, conveyed to Samuel Dibble by Harpin Riggs, Esq., Sheriff of said County, by an order of Court of Equity, by his deed dated March 1st, 1896, and recorded in the Clerk's office for said County in Book 5, pages 297 and 298; and the other tract containing two hundred acres, more or less, conveyed to Samuel Dibble by E. I. Cain, Sheriff of said County, by his deed dated December 2nd, 1872, and recorded in the Clerk's office for said County in Book 12, pages 551 and 552; and containing in all one thousand acres, more or less, situate in the County of Orangeburg, in said State, being the same land sold and conveyed to Leonidas L. Jackson by Samuel Dibble by his deed bearing date September 20th, 1909; and said mortgage being for the balance of the purchase money on said lands.

It is understood that seventy-seven and five-sixths (77 5-6) acres of said land was sold to Vernon Brabham and released from the lien of this mortgage; and it is further understood that the pine timber on said lands was also conveyed to Vernon Brabham and the same released from the lien of said mortgage.

(Plats will be exhibited on the day of sale, and a suitable purchaser can arrange with plaintiff for a portion of the purchase money on credit secured by mortgage of the premises.)

Terms—Cash. Purchaser or purchasers to pay for all papers and taxes falling due after the day of sale; and in case the purchaser or purchasers fail to comply with the terms of sale, the said premises will be resold on the same or some subsequent sales day on the same terms, at the risk of the former purchaser or purchasers, and the bidders will be required to put up a forfeit of one hundred dollars when the land is bid off.
